MARCH

WEAKNESSES AND INEQUALITIES

Contemporary cities live with slums, tenements, unauthorized occupations, street dwellers, shelters for refugees and immigrants. They are, almost always, situations of inadequate housing, very precarious and unhealthy, which demand solutions and force architects and urban planners to explore new ways of acting.

APRIL

DIVERSITY AND MIXTURE

Architecture and urbanism must consider the diversity and mixture of cultures and seek interrelation with other professional fields, absorbing anthropological, political, social, cultural, economic, and other visions. They must accept different worldviews and the diversity of genders, races, behaviors, to reduce segregation and contribute to the preservation of the material and immaterial legacies of different peoples.

JUNE

TRANSCIENCE AND FLOWS

In this axis, displacements are addressed, on a planetary scale and on local scales, in their demographic, temporal and human dimensions. Displacements are understood not only for people, but also for goods, services, jobs, information and the strengthening of transnational networks, new forms of communication and new forms of sociability. The speed of these new flows has contributed to the globalization of the practice of architecture and urbanism.
